

10 THINGS AMERICANS CAN DO TO SUPPORT PUBLIC DIPLOMACY

- 1 Host a youth exchange student in your home.
(www.exchanges.state.gov/education/citizens/students)
- 2 Urge your local school board to include foreign languages from grade school through high school — and encourage your children to study a foreign language, world history and international news. (www.future.state.gov)
- 3 Encourage your children to correspond with an electronic pen pal overseas (such as www.epals.com) and to participate in study abroad programs. (www.exchanges.state.gov)
- 4 Get actively involved with organizations that have international programs, such as a local World Affairs Council (www.worldaffairscouncils.org), or non-profit service organizations with global outreach.
- 5 Welcome foreign visitors by supporting international visitor programs. (www.exchanges.state.gov/education/ivp)
- 6 Support international disaster relief programs and organizations that provide international medical assistance. (such as www.Interaction.org)
- 7 Encourage people-to-people dialogue with other faiths through personal outreach or through your own church, synagogue, mosque or other faith-based institution.
- 8 Volunteer to serve on short-term assignments overseas with the USA Freedom Corps' Volunteers for Prosperity program (www.USAFreedomCorps.gov) or with the U.S. Peace Corps. (www.peacecorps.gov)
- 9 Support cultural exchanges for artists, musicians and writers through your local arts institutions and international cultural programs. (www.exchanges.state.gov/education/citizens/culture; or others such as www.meridian.org)
- 10 Encourage your business or corporation to reach out in the countries where it has a presence, providing internships or supporting local schools and charities. (To learn more about private sector outreach around the world or discuss potential partnerships email diplomacyupdate@state.gov)

For information on U.S. international affairs and the work of the U.S. Department of State, visit state.gov